

Transition Planning with Trey: Financial Planning

My parent and I recently set up joint bank account to share so that I can start practicing money management.

The bank gave me a debit card. My parents and I discussed rules for when I should and should not use the card, and my care partner set spending limits while I learn.

My parents and I will explore financial choices like an ABLE account, a living trust, or a special needs trust. These are good opportunities for me to practice supported decision-making for financial matters.

I can learn about financial planning programs and services available in my community by searching Work Together NC's website
